PREFACE.

This work is offered to the profession as a general Repertory of the Homœopathic Materia Medica. It is not calculated to take the place of the repertories on special subjects, such as Boenninghausen's "Therapeutic Pocket Book," Guernsey on "Hæmorrhoids," Allen's "Intermittent Fever," Lee and Clark's "Cough Repertory," and Bell on "Diarrhœa," but rather to be a connecting link between these special works, answering the requirements of the physician in a general practice of acute and chronic diseases.

The Repertory has been built from all sources, and is a compilation of all the useful symptoms recorded in the fundamental works of our Materia Medica, both ancient and modern, as well as taken from the notes of our ablest practitioners. Many unverified symptoms have been omitted, but only when there was a decided doubt about their consistency, and on the other hand clinical matter has been given a place when it was observed to be consistent with the nature of the remedy.

The plan of the Repertory is uniform throughout, and it is one which admits of the indefinite expansion of each division, so that remedies can be added from time to time as they come into use or have been confirmed and verified. It has been attempted to proceed in every case from generals to particulars, and in carrying this out the aim has been to give first of all a general rubric containing all the remedies which have produced the symptom, followed by the particulars, viz., the time of occurrence, the circumstances, and lastly the extensions. Here it may be remarked, in regard to extensions, that the point from which a certain symptom extends is the one under which that symptom will be found, never under the point to which it extends.

As is well known to older practitioners, the method of working out a case from generals to particulars is the most satisfactory. If a case is worked out merely from particulars it is more than probable that the remedy will not be seen, and frequent failure will be the result. This is due to the fact that the particular directions in which the remedies in the general rubric tend have not yet been observed, and thus to depend upon a small group of remedies relating to some particular symptom is to shut out other remedies which may have that symptom, although not yet observed. By working in the other direction, however, i. e., from generals to particulars, the general rubric will include all the remedies that are related to the symptom, and, if after having done this the particulars are then gone into and the remedy which runs through the general rubrics is found to have the particular symptoms, this will aid in its choice as the one to be prescribed. Take, for example, the particular symptom, "blueness of fingers during chill." If this symptom alone were consulted in a special work, we would be limited to Natrum, Nux-v and Petr. But if the general rubric "blueness of fingers," regardless of the name of the disease, be consulted, it will be seen that twelve remedies are to be noted. Even this is a narrow way of looking at the symptom; to be certain of finding the remedy we may have to consult the rubric "blueness of the hands," giving about forty remedies, among which the one sought may be found, whereas it was probably not included in the groups of twelve and three. One object, then, of this Repertory has been to assist in obtaining good general groups of remedies. When pathological names are used, only the leading remedies in the condition referred to will be found in the rubric.

To those who have used Boenninghausen's "Therapeutic Pocket Book" the working out of cases from generals is a familiar method. But for the benefit of the younger men the following suggestions are offered which may prove helpful: After taking the case according to the lines laid down in the "Organon" (§§ 83-104), write out all the mental symptoms and all symptoms and conditions predicated of the patient himself and search the Repertory for symptoms that correspond to these. Then individualize still further, using the symptoms predicated of the organs, functions and sensations, always giving an important place to the time of occurrence of every symptom until every detail has been examined. Then examine the symptom picture collectively, comparatively and individually, and lastly study the Materia Medica of such remedy or remedies as run through the symptoms of the case until there is no doubt about which is the most similar of all remedies.

Cross references have been inserted wherever it was thought they would be needed, but doubtless more could profitably be added. Many busy men will find groups of remedies under headings different from the one they would naturally look for. If a cross reference be made at the time it will always help to find that rubric in the future, and if all such cross references be sent to the author they will assist in making later editions more complete. Physicians are requested to send in verified and clinical symptoms, and to call attention to any errors which they may discover in the text. Only in this way can we expect to have a complete and correct repertory. It is suggested that those who use this Repertory should first of all read the headings of the general rubrics from the beginning to the end and thus become acquainted with the plan upon which it is formed. Only by constant use can any repertory become a companion and a helper.
